Types of Houses (urban, country house, apartment)

Traditional English House Many English families live in flats, but a lot of people have got their own houses. The bedrooms, the bathroom and the toilet are upstairs, on the first floor. The sitting room, the dining room, the kitchen and the hall are downstairs.

Rooms in the traditional English house A living room A bedroom A dining room A kitchen A hall A bathroom A toilet

Today people in Britain buy more houses than in the past. About two thirds of the people in England and the rest of Britain either own, or are in the process of buying, their own home. Most others live in houses or flats that they rent. England has many types of homes. In the large cities, people often live in flats. Almost half of London's households are flats. A big problem in England is the rising cost of houses.

Types of houses in Great Britain 1. A detached house (a house not joined to another house). 2. A semi-detached house (two houses joined together). 3. A terraced house (several houses joined together). 4. A block of flat. 5. A cottage.

A detached house “Detached” means not connected on any side with any other building. Many British people think that a detached house is the best type of house to live in.

A semi – detached house is a pair of joined houses. A semi-detached house is the most popular type of home in England (more than 27% of all homes).

A terraced house is one of a row of similar houses joined together by their side walls.

A cottage- The cottage is a lovely small house located outside the city, with a land plot (a garden).

A block of flats A block of flats is a large building that has a lot of flats where people live.

Names of the houses All houses in Britain have a number. Few of them have a name. For example: The Mill house Priest house Poppy Cottage Stone house Lavender Cottage Bede Cottage.
